November 7 – 9, 2014

Glen Lakes Camp and Conference Center

Many words can be used to describe Unitarian Universalist congregations, but static is not one of them. Placed in the context of and intentionally engaging with the ever-changing landscape of modern society and ethics, congregations grow, change, adapt, and respond to the world around them. Join us at “Fall Training 2014: Oh! The Places You'll Go!” to explore the dynamic nature of congregations and their leaders and gain tools for navigating these often choppy waters. Where will your congregation go next?

Introduction to Leadership as a Spiritual Practice

Leader: Maggie Lovins, Congregational Life Staff for the Southern Region of the UUA

FOR: Youth, Young Adults, New Lay Leaders in Congregations, Board Members, Committee Chairs, Nominating Committee Members, Those hoping to move into leadership roles within a congregation or the larger movement, Those preparing for DBLE in the next two years, and those who wish to start a Leadership Development Program in your congregation.

Exploring self-discovery techniques, systems theory, and how our UU Theology and Polity inform our work within a congregation, Maggie will lead you on a journey through the beginnings of leadership development. This track is specifically designed for people in congregations who have had no or little experience leading in a Unitarian Universalist setting. This track is ideal for Youth Leaders, Young Adults, and other new members who will be moving into leadership positions in the upcoming years. This track is also useful for those congregations who are starting a Leadership Development Program and would like tools and resources for training new congregational leaders.

Renaissance Module: Youth Ministry

Leaders:

Every year thousands of youth attend Unitarian Universalist congregations. Ministry with these youth is a ministry of the whole congregation, with religious educators, ministers, and youth advisors playing key roles. One of the central outcomes of the UUA's Consultation on Ministry to and with Youth was to re-imagine youth ministry not as an isolated program within the congregation, but as a ministry that is integrated throughout our faith communities. The Youth Ministry Renaissance Module gives religious educators and other religious professionals who work with youth the tools to design and implement vibrant, congregationally-integrated youth ministries. Youth Advisors, Ministers, DREs, and Youth are all encouraged to attend this important educational experience.

Here is the schedule we will use for the module.

Friday:

8:00 – 10:00 PM                      Module Session 1

Saturday:

9:00 AM – 12:00 PM                  Module Session 2

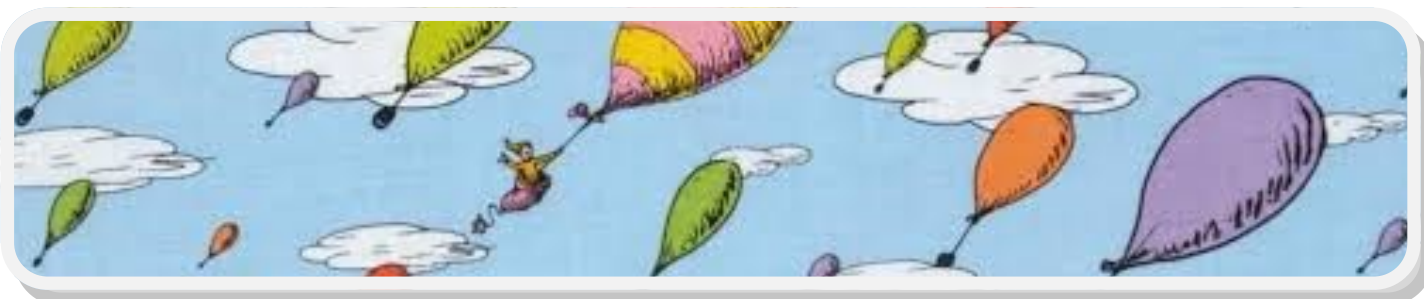

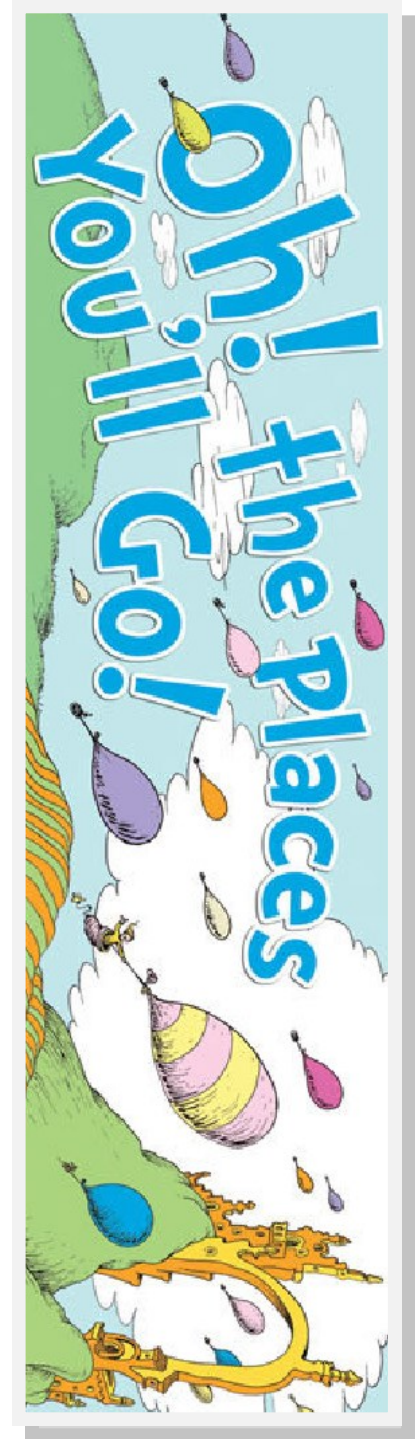

1:00 PM – 5:00 PM                    Module Session 3

6:00 PM – 9:00 PM                    Module Session 4

Sunday

8:45 AM – 10:45 AM                  Module Session 5

1:00 PM – 3:00 PM                    Module Session 6

Walking the Twin Paths of Stewardship

Stewardship is a funny thing. Perhaps more than any other part of our shared ministry, stewardship calls on the whole person, on both sides of our brain. It's not enough to have a good heart and a generous soul to have a healthy stewardship environment. On the other hand, just having great process, technical prowess, and strong administration will not succeed. Stewardship requires we have both a sense of mission with a spiritual grounding AND that we plan, train, and carry out our programs effectively.

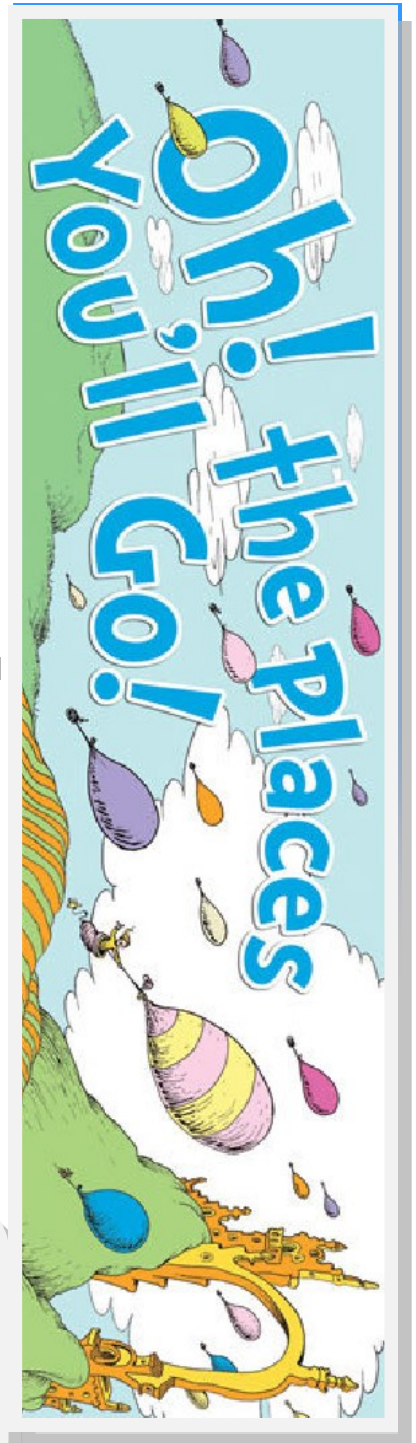

On this stewardship track, we will walk a bit on both paths that lead to stewardship. We will examine the UU experience with stewardship, how we perceive it, how we think about it, how we address it. We will seek to find our spiritual and moral grounding for stewardship. We will also take a look at what makes stewardship programs, budget drives, and capital campaigns successful. What techniques and procedures consistently deliver positive results and build community. Let's talk stewardship, shall we?

William R. (Bill) Clontz

Stewardship Consultant

UUA Congregational Stewardship Network

Bill brings over forty years in leadership development and coaching, organizational effectiveness, and strategic planning to his mission as a UUA CSN Consultant. He has over twenty years of active participation in UU church leadership and stewardship, fifteen years of business development and portfolio management as a corporate officer, and three years of experience on corporate 401K advisory and continuity teams. Bill has served in his own congregation on the Board of Trustees, Program Council Convener, on the Endowment and Stewardship Committees, as Chair of the Leadership Development Team, led a Capital Campaign team, formed the Communications Council, and hosted a regional UUA FORTH conference attended by representatives from five states. He has served regional and national boards of professional and nonprofit organizations.

Young Adults and Allies

Leader: Elizabeth Mount

FOR: Youth, Young Adults, Young Adult Allies, Religious Education Professionals, Program Directors, Board Members, Committee on Ministry Members, Committee Chairs, Ministers, Administrators, Lay Leaders, and any person who loves their congregation.

What does it mean to be in intentional community with Young Adults? How can UU communities welcome Young Adult voices? How can Young Adults partner with other members of UU communities to bring about important change? Elizabeth Mount will explore UUYA culture in this thought-provoking week of dialogue as we examine how to partner with people of all ages and build strong multi-generational communities. For this workshop, congregations are asked to send a team consisting of at least one Young Adult and one Young Adult Ally.

March to Selma

Leaders: Carrie Stewart, Right Relations Specialist for the Southern Region of the UUA, and Lewis Morris, Right Relations Specialist for the Southern Region of the UUA.

FOR: Youth, Young Adults, Board Members, Committee on Ministry Members, Committee Chairs, Ministers, Finance and Stewardship Committee Members, Administrators, Lay Leaders, and any person who loves their congregation.

As Christopher L. Walton wrote in his UU World article titled “So Nobly Started,”:

The Unitarian Universalist Association was not quite four years old when the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. sent an urgent telegram to its Boston headquarters on March 7, 1965, asking religious leaders and concerned citizens to join him in Selma, Alabama, where African Americans marching for their right to vote had been brutally attacked by lawmen. Two of the Unitarian Universalists who responded to King’s appeal paid with their lives. In a way that few deaths do, the murders of the Rev. James J. Reeb and Viola Gregg Liuzzo helped change the course of history. But 36 years after the protests that culminated in the march to Montgomery, new aspects of the story are coming to light. How unfinished our relationship to the past is.

Children's EvoluUtion Camp

Leaders: Sean Briscoe, Coordinator of Religious Education, and Rachel Finley, Director of Religious Education

FOR: Children ages 5 to 14

Exploring the principles of evolution, both on a planetary and cosmological scale, our EvoluUtion camp will delve into the secrets of creation itself! Using Connie Barlow and Michael Dowd's "The Great Story" as well as a trip to the Dinosaur tracks in Glen Rose, we're putting the Universal in Universalist! Children will have fun exploring the ever-expanding universe and the wonders of the planet as we grow in faith and connect with our Seventh Principle, the inter-connected web of existence of which we are all a part.
